There is, however, another stem pit or pet expressing he notion of small and pointed, such as a wasp's v. Körting, sub Pic, where he writes: "A thorough investigation of this important stem, pic, is still wanting; particularly as to its relation firstly with the family of words connected with the Gallo-Latin becus, and secondly to a number of words standing near to it in meaning and discussed by Diez under Pito... Such an investigation might very probably show that alongside of the (Latin) stem pic(e) there was a Celtic stem peti, and that the two came into contact in the sense of tiny (winzig), from which parallel words with similar or nearly similar meanings resulted, such as It. piccolo, Span. pequeño, alongside of Fr. petit."

di mare, or Polcinella di mare, puffin, v. Puffino.

Etyim. A dim. <L. pullus, v. Pulcella, and Skeat, sub Punch. Pianigiani's account of the word is as follows: A Neapolitan vocabulary of 1789 says, "In the last century a company of strolling players were attacked by robbers near Acerra but beat them off with the help of a countryman, named Puccio d' Aniello, who had a queer-looking face with a long nose all blackened by the sun. After their victory they were unwilling to let him go and took him into their company. He was agreeable to this and made himself a favourite with the public by his sallies of wit. His 'mask' and character took their place in the theatrical world under the name of Pulcinella." This anecdote is not generally accepted, and some derive the term from the Neapolitan Polcinella, dim. of Pollecena, turkey pullet, to the beak of which the nose of Pulcinella bears a resemblance; others refer to a certain Paulo Cinella, who is said to have acted the part of a buffoon in the time of Charles of Anjou. Andrea Perrucci, who lived in the 16th century, states that the type was invented by Silvio Fioricello, a comedian, and perfected by Andrea Calcese, surnamed Cuicello, who died in 1656, taking as his model the country-folk near Acerra. Génin states that it is the Maccus of the old Atellan plays; and in 1727 a statue was found at Acerra, near Aversa, the ancient Atella, with pointed cap and double hump like the French and English Punch. This, however, though it may illustrate the antiquity of the "mask," does not explain its etymology, which is modern.

The French Punch has two humps, either from the classical prototype or in caricature of the cuirasses of the time of Henry IV; he is a brave and first-class ruffian, whilst the Neapolitan Punch is a fool and a coward, laughed at by everybody for his mistakes, and when he undertakes anything makes a frightful mess of it. He is a wretched creature, but content with his misery: a dish of macaroni and the climate of Naples make up his paradise.

980 There is considerable difference between English and Italian punctuation, commas being often inserted without interruption to the sense but merely to draw some of the words together, when the same punctuation in English would indicate an interruption. For instance, Ahi quanto io vorrei, innanzi che la mia mano dritta notasse, ch' ella scrivesse, e per l' usate acque a te mi portasse (transl. of Ovid's Leander to Hero), where the commas after vorrei and notasse if given the force they would have in English printing would reverse the meaning and make nonsense of the sentence. The sense is of course Would my hand were swimming rather than writing, whilst the commas make it look to an English eye as if it was Would my hand, rather than swimming, were writing.

Razza f.; 1. race, all the descendants of a family. 2. breed, class of animals; also by extension, of plants. 3. Far —, (a) of animals, to breed, (b) fig. in play, to begin winning, (c) Far — da sè, to prefer living alone.

Etyim. dub. Cogn. Fr. race, Provenç. and Span. raza, Portug. raça. The fact that no word of the group appears earlier than the latter part of the Middle Ages excludes immediate derivation either from O.H.G. or from Latin. Three suggestions then remain open: (1) Slavonic (regarded as possible by Hatfield and Darmstetter, Dict. franç., "Race, < It. razza, d'origine incertaine, peut-être slave"), vis. < the Slavonic word raz, translated by Körtling as Schlag, Gepräge, Gattung, — imprint, species. (2) Körtling, objecting to this because the z in raz is soft, considers Fr. race to be "presumably a verbal substantive < racer, < raptiare* (cp. chasser, < captiare*), to cultivate a breed of hawks, hence to be a breeder, generally." (3) Pianigiani, quoting the middle Italian form Ragia, inclines to an Arabic source, vis. rās, — origin, beginning, so that the introduction of the word into Europe would be from the Spaniards. cp. Skeat, sub Race.

†Rogare in Latin means "to ask," probably from the root reg, to stretch, so that the original sense is that of stretching out for. As a law term it meant to propose a law for approval and adoption, or a candidate for approval and election to office; the presiding magistrate invited (rogabat) the centuriæ to give their vote. The use of the word in Italian may be attributed to this use of it in Latin, since the drawing up of a deed may be regarded as formulating it for submission to and, if approved, execution by, the party interested. Similarly the notarial attestation of a deed may be regarded as its submission to the notary for his approval as a witness.

Ronzino m.; horse of a sorry kind, nag.

Ety. (from Körtling). "To the Germanic stem ross (= 'horse') there seems to belong the following group of words, though, it must be allowed, with a very curious phonetic development, viz. It. rozza, mare, ronzino, nag (mlt. runcinus), Provenc. rossa (> rossi-s, roc-is, nag) and ronci-s (mlt. runcinus), probably the name of Ronce-val, Fr. rosse, roussin, stallion cob, old Fr. roncin, Picard rouchin, Span. rocin (> rocinando), Portug. rossim, see Diez, sub Rozza. Diez remarks at the end of this article 'Both words—i.e. Runcinus and Rozza—require a more searching investigation,' an observation which still holds good, but the means are unfortunately not forthcoming. Mackel writes 'It is difficult to connect Fr. rossa, etc. with Germanic ross.' The solution may perhaps be as follows: (1) Rozza, rossa, ross, together with the diminutives which have no n, are < Germanic ross, the Ital. zz and the Provenc. and Fr. ss being due to the influence of rozzo and russus (> Fr. roux, rouisse) respectively; it is to be observed that horses of a marked red colour are often cross-gained creatures. (2) Mlt. runcinus and the group of words belonging to it are < a stem runc (> L. runcus, hoe, cp. Ital. ronca, bill-hook, pike with a curved blade), so that the literal sense of runcinus would be poor thin horse with ribs sticking out like hooks or pikes."

S, pronounced Èsse, m. or f.; pl. Èssi or Èsse.

1. It is hard in adjectives in -oso, and after a consonant, e.g. Arso, Polso, and when doubled, and before a vowel at the beginning of a word. It is soft like the English s before b, g, l, m, n, r, v, and before ia, ie, io when pronounced together. In the head-words of this book the soft S is marked S where it seems desirable to mark the distinction.

2. In composition S is usually privative, representing the Latin preposition ex, out, or sometimes the Latin prefix dis-, but it is frequently intensive, representing the Latin ex in the sense of thoroughly, and also occurs as a mere idle prefix with no real force, as in Strapunto. It thus happens that the same word may have two opposite meanings, e.g. Sgonfiare.

3. Abbreviations: C.S., come sopra; S.P.Q.R., Senatus populusque Romanus; S., Santo, Singolare, Sostantivo, Seguento, (mus.) Solo; S.A., Sua Altezza; SS., Santissimo, Signor; SS.PP., Santi padri; S.M., Sua Maestà, Sue mani, stesso mese; S.P.M., Sue proprie mani; S.S., Sacra Scrittura, Santa Sede, Sua Santità; S.V. or V.S., Vostra signoria; S.E., Su' Eccellenza, Eminenza; S.E.O., salvo errore ed omissione; P.S., Pubblica sicurezza; S.U., Stati Uniti; S. Sud; S.E., S.-O., Sud-est, Sud-ovest; P.S., Poscritto.

4. On French coins an S meant the mint of Rheims, on Spanish coins that of Seville.

5. Many words begin with Sch or St indifferently, e.g. Schiantare, Stiantare.

Sa; v. Sapere.

Salpa f.; 1. a genus of tunicate molluscs. 2. gold-line (fish), v. Boba (z).

Salpare (Sarpapare); 1. (mar.) to weigh anchor, hence 2. generally, to set out.

Etym. dub. Two suggestions are forthcoming: (1) from Diez: "Cogn. Wallachian sarpa, Span. and Portug. zarpar, Fr. sarper, to heave the anchor. Muratori refers to Gr. ἀρπάω, to snatch, but it would be preferable to look to ἐξαρπάω, to snatch out, which is also an actual word. The passage from an initial εξ or ἐξ to a simple s is paralleled in Saggio, Sarte, Sesta. A Greek derivation is rendered more probable by the existence of the word in Wallachian."

(2) from Körting: "Sarp-o, -ere, to scratch (f), to prune; from the stem sarp- of this verb were developed presumably 1. a sb. sarpia*, thing for scratching, > Fr. sarpe, serpe, gardening knife, Span. zarpa, claw, paw, 2. a verb sarpare*, to seize with the paw, or hand, as the case might be, particularly to get hold of by separate jerks, e.g. a rope which had to be wound up on an anchor to be raised, > Ital. sarpare, salpare, to raise the anchor, Roumanian sarpi, Fr. serper, Catalan serper, Span. and Portug. zarpar." He proceeds to refer to Diez's derivation without commenting on it. If Körting's derivation is correct a simpler theory of Sarpare would be to suppose that sarpa* was applied to the fluke of an anchor, from its shape, for words similar to Sarpa occur in several languages with the sense of sickle, viz. Gr. ἀσπίς, Lettish siņpa, old Bulgarian srāpā, Polish sierp, Russian serpū. Sarpare would then be to do the needful to the anchor flukes, i.e. raise the anchor.

Salviétta a. f.;=Tovagliuolo, napkin. Aff. -ina dim.

Etyim. The Fr. serviette, It. salvietta and Span. servilleta, all meaning "napkin," make a group of somewhat irregular formation; there are difficulties in referring them either to L. servire or salvare. The Italian word seems borrowed from French, with alteration by attraction from Salvare, the native Italian for "napkin" being Tovagliuolo. Körtzing accordingly suggests that from old Fr. serve, maid-servant, a dim. servette* was formed, altered later, after the disappearance of the word serve, under attraction from servir and service, into serviette.

Scaltro; clever, smart, shrewd; sometimes with a certain amount of fault implied, like E. sharp.

Etym. dub. The obvious derivation is from s-intensive and L. cautus with u altered to i (cp. Aldace and Audace) and r added for euphony, which agrees perfectly with the sense. On this theory Scaltro would be the derivative of Scaltro. But it may be the other way about, Scaltro being the earlier word and formed from L. scalpitare, to scratch, like hens, < scalpere, to carve, which is Diez's suggestion. Scaltro would then mean primarily "to engrave like a gem" and so "to smarten."

Sgallinare ind. sgallíno; to rob hen-roosts.

†Sgallozzare; = Gorgogliare, to gurgle.

Sgalluzzare; to enjoy oneself.

Ety. dub. The immediate derivation is from Ital. Galluzare, with prefix of intensive s, a development of Gallare, to be gay, which may either depend upon Gallo, cock, from the cheerful crow or gay appearance of the bird, or, as Körtling thinks, on L. gallari, to run riot, as the Galli, priests of Cybele, or again, as Pianigiani suggests, may be of Germanic origin. The same doubts exist in regard to the word Galloria. Pianigiani writes as follows: "Sgalluzzare to be merry, the meaning being according to some a metaphor from Galluzzo or Galletto as a vivacious creature. But without denying the influence of popular etymology from Galluzzo it seems that the word cannot fail to be connected with O.H.G. geisison, to be joyous, geiz = A.S. geli, glad, geih, joyousness, cp. Gothic gailjan, to rejoice, whence also come the words Gallo, in sense of merriment, Galloria, excessive cheerfulness, and Ringalluzzire, to be sprightly, cp. old Fr. gale, cheerfulness, galer, to rejoice."

The word Galluzzo is not to be found as meaning a cock, but the existence of the verb Galluzzare suffices for the argument above quoted.

Sgamb-are (A) (It. gamba); to walk fast. -arsi, to walk oneself off one's legs. Aff. -ata sb. run.

Si (A) (L. se); oneself. Before an i or in poetry before other vowels the i of Si is replaced by an apostrophe; S' intende, of course. With a verb it is either reflective or reciprocal, Spogliarsi, to undress; Si battono, they are fighting with each other. Often pleonastic; Il fatto si è, the fact is. Si morì, he died. As an indefinite pronoun it serves like Fr. on, Germ. man, E. one. Col denaro si ha tutto ciò che si vuole, if one has money one can get whatever one wants. Più si è ricco, più si è avaro, the richer people are, the more covetous they are. But although often practically a nominative it seems to be so far felt as a reflective pronoun as to be rarely used with a verb in the singular and an object in the plural. In Inghilterra s' impiccano gli omicidi (rather than s' impicca gli omicidi, though this form of phrase could also be used), in Francia si tronca loro la testa, in England murderers are hanged, in France their heads are cut off.

Before la, lo, li, le and ne, Si is changed into Se; Se lo mangiarono tutto, they ate it all up.

(B) (L. sic, thus); 1. yes, distinguished from Si, oneself, by an accent Si. 2. for tanto; Non sono si paziente che... I am not so patient that...; Sarebbe egli si minchione, if he should be such a fool; Si e si mi ha detto, he told me this and that. 3. Si... si, both; Lo faccio si per il mio utile si per il vostro bene, I do it both for my own profit and for your advantage. 4. Si e no, more or less; Sarà due litri si e no, it will be two litres or thereabouts. 5. from the Yes of the marriage ceremony, Si is sometimes said in the sense of a wedding; T' aspetto al si, I shall expect you at the wedding; Quanti si questa settimana, what a number of weddings in this week. 6. La lingua del si, i.e. Italian.

Simifonti; "a strong fortress in the Valdelsa, S.W. of Florence; in 1202 it was captured and destroyed by the Florentines, with whom it had long been carrying on hostilities. Cacciaguada, in the Heaven of Mars, mentions it in connection with some individual (who has not been identified) of whom he says that his grandfather was a beggar at Simifonti while he, the descendant, had become a money-changer at Florence, D. Par. 16. 62 The point of Cacciaguada's allusion, which appears to be to some special circumstance, is not now understood. Some think the reference is to an incident in the taking of Simifonti by the Florentines, to whom the fortress was betrayed by one of its defenders, as is recorded by Villani; Casini thinks there may possibly be a reference to one of the Velluti family, who were well-known merchants and money-changers in Florence, and originally came from Lippo del Velluto who is mentioned by Dino Compagni (i. 18) as belonging to the government which expelled Giano della Bella in 1295." Sónda f.; 1. (surv.) sound, a kind of long probe. 2. sounding rod of a pump.

Etyim. Fr. sonde, properly the lead used at sea in taking soundings, but the sb. sonde having been adopted by surgeons in sense of probing, the sb. sonde took a corresponding sense. The verb does not occur in Italian. Sonàre, to take soundings, is from the old Fr. sonde, arm of the sea, borrowed from Scandinavian sund (> E. sound, with the same meaning), so that originally sonde was to try the depth where from the narrowness of the channel the water might probably be shallow. Modern Fr. sonde, the lead for sounding, is < sonde, to sound, so that its connection with old Fr. sonde is only indirect. The Scandinavian sund is probably for swm-lo, from the same root as E. swim, with passive participial suffix, so that the meaning is, place which may be swum across.

Etyim. Cogn. Fr. and Provenç. sortir, Span. sortir, of L. origin, but actual derivation uncertain. Hatfield and Darmstadter are inclined to regard it as the same word as Sortire (A), sortir having formerly had the meaning "to obtain by lot" in French as in Italian, but under reserve on account of the difficulty in the transition of meaning. Körtling mentions several alternatives, all of which he rejects decisively except one, viz. that of derivation from L. sortus, a popular contraction of surrectus, part. of surgere, to rise; this form sortus is mentioned by Festus and is also seen in the part. of It. Sorgere. Körtling's chief objection to this view is that the regular derivative would be a form in -are, not -ire, but that difficulty does not occur if we attribute the word to an original surrecture*. V. Skeat, sub Sortie.

Sottosquadro m.; oblique cavity, a term used by silversmiths for those parts of a model which are sunk in at an acute angle from the general surface, the counterparts of which are corresponding parts of the form or mould which stick out, the one set fitting into the other, an arrangement which would make it impossible to separate the form from the specimen when it has been cast, without spoiling one or the other; this difficulty is met by the use of Tasselli, which are pieces made of the same material as the mould but separate from it and are placed in position in it; they correspond in shape to the several oblique cavities of the model.

The Tasselli are kept in their places inside the mould by means of a loop of string which passes into a wire stirrup or mesh, which was fixed in the substance of the Tassello while it was soft; it is then held by a little peg which serves to twist up and tighten the loop outside the mould. In this way the Tasselli can be taken out one by one by pulling each one in a suitable direction corresponding to the bends of the Sottosquadro (E. Sergeant, Arti e Mestieri).

Etyim. Either by metathesis < sparginare*, formed from Spargere, like Sciorinare from Solcare, or directly from Spargere with an altered termination, taken perhaps from Starnazzare, q.v. The Sardinian form of the word, Spartzial, gives some support to the first-mentioned alternative.

Sparo m.; 1. firing off. 2. = Sparato, opening in a dress. 3. a genus of fishes, Sparus, v. Sargo (3).

Sparvagi-are; to scatter about.

Etyim. hazy. Cogn. Provenç. esparvalhar, old
Fr. esparvelier (> Fr. éparviller), Span. despar-vajar, "pointing to a bit. form sparviliare*, of uncertain origin, perhaps from a fusion of the stems of L. spargere and papilio, butterfly" (Hatzfeld and Darmestetter). Diez traces the word to L. papilio, through a corruption parpaglia* (v. Farfalla); Caix to a fusion of two equivalents, Spargere and Spagliare, or simply to reduplication of the first syllable of Spagliare, spag-spagliare* > Spargagliare, the s being altered into r as in Tartassare; this last seems the simplest supposition and brings the word back to L. palea, straw, so that the literal meaning would be
"to toss about like straw."

Sparsaménto; disconnectedly, here and there.

Etyim. dub. The immediate origin may be blt. stufa, > Provenç. estuba, stua, Fr. duve, Span. estufa, all meaning a hot room. The blt. word is attributed by Diez to O.H.G. stufē, room, > Germ. Stube, cp. A.S. stofa, Swedish stufva, identified by Grimm with A.S. stōw, place, root stā, to stand fast. But this derivation is very doubtful, the alternative being that suggested by Bugge, viz. blt. estufare*, on which theory the st vb. Stufare would be the progenitor of Stufa sb. and the Germanic words borrowed from the Latin source. Estufare would be < L. typhus, = Gr. τῑφος, exhalation, vapour, and Stufa's derivation accords with the historical fact that hot rooms were in use amongst the Romans earlier than amongst the Germans. Cp. Skeat, ed. 1910, sub Stove. For typhus, v. infra, Tifo.

Stufare, to nauseate (cogn. Fr. nauséer), certainly appears to point to estufare*, cp. Lombard dial. Tufo, fetid exhalation, and in the dialect of the Val di Chiavina, Tufeta, dense mist, Stufare holding much the same relation to Tufo as Stuccare holds to stunh, v. supra, Stuccare (B).

Etym. obscure. Tasca may be supposed to be the same word as Germ. Tasche, pocket, but whether the German form is borrowed from the Italian or vice versa and what the origin of it may be is quite unknown. Attempts have been made to connect it with Fr. tâche and therefore with E. task, but they are entirely unsatisfactory. There is also an O.H.G. word tassa, but this was a contemptuous term for woman, which makes it difficult to regard as the origin of Tasche, pocket, though Kluge accepts it as such.

Tedesc-amènte adv.; -ante Germanising; -eggiare vb.; -heria f. German ways; -o German; -òne augm., -òtto augm. vezz., -ume spregh., of -o.

Etyim. mlt. theodiscus, > Germ. deutsch. "The first examples of the word are purely linguistic, and occur only in Latin texts: as theodisca lingua in the Lorsch Annalen A.D. 788, in the Capitulaire Italicum 801, and in Smaragdus Donatkommentar, about 805, as sermo theoticus in Walahfrid Strabo about 840, as a single word theodisca in the catalogue of the Reichenau library, and as theodisco, 831, in the catalogue of the library of St Riquier. The oldest instance, theodisce, is in a report of the Cardinal archbishop George of Ostia to Pope Hadrian I.

That the primary sense of theodiscus had reference to language is shown by old passages extending it to the language of other Germanic races, vis. Anglo-Saxon, 786, Lombard, 788 and 801, Gothic, 805 and 840. It no doubt arose in the Carolingian Empire for the purpose of expressing the languages of the six Rhine provinces by one term, the need for which was felt by the German Church from the time of the Mission of Boniface. Thus it is not a term of racial geography but of ecclesiastical politics, and on this account occurs in the first instance only in a Latin form: Otrried, about 860, has in his super-scription I, cur autor hunc librum theodisce conscripserit, but in the German text which follows he calls his German thun fränkiska zunga" (Kluge, Etyim. dict.).

Theodiscus is formed from O.H.G. theoda, people, akin to A.S. thioð, people, cp. Gothic thiudiskō, popular, national. The root is tu, to swell, cp. L. totus, Ocean totus, civic community. V. Skeat, sub Teutonic, Tumid; Walde, sub Tumeo; Kluge, sub Deutsch.

Etym. L., vis. either < tentare or templare, two words the identity of which is doubtful. Tentare is a frequentative from tentum, supine both of tenere and tendere, and the senses of trying, tempting, and so on, readily come from either. Templare is either a variant of tentare or together with tentus, temple of the head, referable to a root temp-, v. Walde, sub Templo. Walde interprets temp- as either spannen (= to strain) or schlagen, klopfen (= to knock), and tentus, either as Gespanntes, or Schlagendes, Klopfendes, on which showing tempus is to be regarded as either that part of the head which is stretched straight or that part which throbs, viz. from the temporal artery, and templare is primarily either to keep straining after or to keep knocking at.

Other terms for various kinds of open gallery are Balcone, Terrazzino, Verone, Ballatoio, which are distinguished as follows by E. Sergent in his Vocabolario domestico.

"It seems that Balcone as used by old authors is the same as Finestra, but it would not be so used in Tuscany now, unless possibly in a lofty style of writing and in reference to great houses. At Rome, Naples and elsewhere, a Balcone is what is called in Tuscany a Terrazzino.

"Terrazzino is a horizontal surface, generally of stone, projecting from the outer wall of a house; it is placed in front of a window opening down to the floor and is closed in by a railing or by balusters.

"The floor of the Terrazzino is generally on a level with that of the room. In some Italian cities it is termed Poggiuolo, a word which seems to have been used nearly in the same sense by old Tuscan authors.

"Terrazzo is an uncovered space in the upper floors, sometimes in the top floor of the house, open on one or more sides and protected by a railing, a balustrade, or a parapet.

"Verone was formerly used for either Terrazzo, Loggia, Andito, or Corridoio. At the present day, especially in country places, it is the landing, with a parapet or railing, at the top of an outside staircase parallel to the house wall.

"Ballatoio is a long balcony overhanging the courtyard or the street and serving to give access to various rooms. Another term for it is Ringhiera, the name of the part being taken for the whole. The name of Ballatoio is also given to the platform surrounding the base of a church dome either internally or externally, or to that running round the interior of the church itself, its floor being formed by a widely-projecting cornice."

Etyim. Cogn. Fr. trompe, trumpet, trombe, waterspout, Provenc. and Span. trompa, trumpet.

In sense of trumpet the word is < O.H.G. trumba, of Slavonic origin, cp. old Slavonic and Polish tramba, Slovenian tromba, trbba, trumpet, Russian truba, pipe, tube, trumpet, v. Skeat, sub Trump. An alternative but not probable derivation is < L. trumpare, through a form trumpare* > trumpa*, vbsb., in the face of the Slavonic words this does not seem very convincing. Diez is inclined to trace Tromba, trumpet, to L. tuba, trumpet, though he does not offer tubus, tube, as origin of Tromba, suction-pipe; on the other hand he puts forward turbo as the source of Tromba, whirlwind. On the whole one may say that as trumpet the word is probably from the Slavonic source, as pipe perhaps from the same, and as whirlwind probably < L. turbo.

Trottare ind. trótto; to trot. Aff. -ata, -atina, -atóre, -atóra, -atrice, -arellare aim. to go trotting along, -erello sb.

Etyim. Cogn. Provenc. Span. and Portug. trotar, old Fr. trotier (> Fr. trôlier and E. trot), old Fr. trotier, a trotter, messenger, milt. trotarius, which answers so nearly to L. solatarius, going at a trot, that it is usual to suppose old Fr. trotier to result from a milt. tolatarius*, to trot, by the common change of t into r and loss of o. Tolatarius is < tolutum adu., at a trot, lit. "with a lifting up of the feet," < toltere, to lift, v. Togliere. This etymology is accepted by Diez, Littré and Scheler, and there seems to be no need for the alternative, vie. < M.H.G. troeten* (> O.H.G. trōtōn), akin to O.H.G. trahan (> Germ. trāhen), though this is adopted by Kluge.

Truffa f.; i. swindling. 2. (Roba) da —, of the poorest quality.

Etyim. Cogn. old Fr. truffe (> Fr. truffe, truffle), Span. trufa, < L. tuber, v. Tuberio. Old Fr. truffe meant both truffle, the edible fungus, and mockery, railway, whilst Span. trufa still means both truffle and fraud, though modern French only has truffe, a truffle.

Derivation < L. tuber is evidenced by the Italian term for truffle, tartufo (= terras tuberum), a word which passed into German as tartoffel, altered later into Kartoffel, to signify another kind of tuber, the potato. The corresponding English word is trifle, which is of course the old Fr. truffe, and occurs in early English in the sense of fraud, "theos ant othere truffes thet he bitruffeth monie men mide," these and other delusions that he beguiles many men with, Andren Riwle, p. 106, quoted by Skeat, ed. 1910, sub Trifle; this meaning still lingers in the phrase, to trifle with.

Any small worthless object might give rise to a generic term for trifle or for railway or even, if palmed off as valuable, for fraud, but it is curious that a truffle should have been the thing to achieve this distinction.

†Vernacchiáia f.;=Palina, copse of underwood.

†Vernacchio m.; chestnut tree.

Vernaccia f.; a white Sardinian wine.

Etyim. unkn. The most obvious derivation would be < vernacus, < L. verna, domestic slave, v. Vernacolo. Other suggestions are (1) hibernaceus as being wine ready by the winter, (2) the city of Verona, but this last seems a very wild guess.

Vernaccio m.; pegg. Verno.

Vernácolo; vernacular.

Etyim. L. vernaculus, < verna, slave born in his master's house, for vesna, root ves, to abide, ep. L. Vesta, goddess of the household, Gr. tória, *i. balcony, ii.=Loggia, iii.=Andito, passage.

Etyim. unkn. The most probable derivation seems to be that of Körtling, vs. < L. veru, spit, of which a pl. variant verones occurs in an inscription meaning the railings round a tomb, so that Verone originally referred to the balustrade protecting an outside landing. Veru corresponds to Irish bir, Breton ber, spit, v. Barra.

Verricello m.; i. winch. 2. i.g. Burberino.

Etyim. dub. but the word is no doubt akin to Verrina, auger, both being related in the same kind of way to L. vertere, v. Verrina.

Verrína f.;=Trapano, auger.

*Etyim. dub. Cogn. Sardinian dial. berrina, barrina, Fr. vrille (?), Span. barena, Catalan barrina, Portug. verruma, barruma (?), all meaning auger, blt. verinus, screw of a press; the kinship, however, is doubtful as regards the French and Portuguese forms, vrille being rather for vrille, < L. viticulus, and barruma of Arabic origin. Diez attributes the group to L. veruina, short spear, < veru, v. Barra, but Körtling, seeing the double r, considers vertebrina, dim. of vertebra, in sense of turning instrument, a more probable source. A simpler supposition would be that the double r represents an original rs, so that Verrina and its* cognates would belong to the stem vers, seen in L. versus, part. of vertere; this hypothesis would also serve for Verricello. For rs > rr, v. infra, Verruca.

Verrin-are ind. verrino; to bore, v. -a.

Verríno m.; a poisonous fungus, Boletus mutabilis.

Vérro; v. Verre.

Vistare; to pass, viser a document.

Visto; part. Vedere. smart*, ready.

Etyim. The forms Veduto, Visto, which are alternative passive parts of Vedere, show that there was a blt. part. viditus of L. videre, the passive part. of which in classical L. is visus. Visto as adj. is cognate to Provenç. vista and old Fr. viste, < Fr. vlt. Hatfield and Darmstadter regard the origin of these words as unknown, but derivation from viditus* seems reasonable enough and is accepted by Littré and favoured by Diez. The transition of meaning is illustrated by Fr. id., v. Tosto. Or Visto may be for Avvisto*, —Avveduto, wary, ready, which could easily pass into meaning "smart." The modern word for "smart" is Vispo, which is probably a variant of Visto, the change of t into p being due to the influence of Vespa, Vipistrello, wasps and bats being lively creatures.

A MODERN ENGLISH AND ITALIAN VOCABULARY

NOTE

In this edition an attempt has been made at including the technical terms which came in with the war, including those of aviation and submarine navigation.

The arrangement of the paragraphing and of the grouping of words is designed solely for convenience, and for the same reason many words have been grouped under initial letters common to them, regardless of their derivation. Thus, for instance, Abys-sinian is hooked on to Abys-mal and Abys-s.

Words identical in the two languages are left untranslated and are marked with the abbreviation id.
